CodeRED is a new Columbus County service by which County officials can notify residents by telephone about emergency situations or critical community alerts. CodeRED was designed by public safety officials for public safety officials. For more than 25 years, CodeRED has helped organizations and agencies in the U.S. deliver emergency alerts quickly and reliably to help save lives.

The system is capable of sending messages to people affected by a particular situation or to the entire population throughout the County. For example, the system has the capability to send messages to all residents that would be affected by a widespread emergency such as a hurricane. The system also has the capability to issue notices to the public in particular situations such as a water main break or a boil water advisory. CodeRED will also call you and your neighbors to deliver very important health advisories.
